Isn't cable better than satellite?

No. Actually all television is delivered via satellite. Bulk TV & Internet is essentially providing clients with their own digital signal from the satellite. By receiving their programming directly, the signal strength to the property is typically twice that of what the cable company provides, increasing the quality of picture and sound while decreasing potential service issues.

Does service go down every time it rains?

No. This is referred to as rain fade. To combat this, Bulk TV & Internet uses a commercial-grade dish antenna, resulting in a much stronger signal. Bulk TV & Internet also uses commercial-heated dishes in northern or mountain climates, which eliminate ice and snow buildup. Please keep in mind that your local cable company also receives programming via satellite dish antennas and amplifies signals to entire cities; we're providing your property with its own private cable system, resulting in a superior picture and sound and less service-related issues.

Do you have to run new cabling throughout my property?

No. We'll utilize your existing cabling distribution system. Typically, we can distribute a much stronger signal to your units than what local cable companies provide.

Will we get the local network channels?

Yes. They are available in over 97% of the country via high-powered digital satellite. If they are not available via satellite, Bulk TV & Internet will provide them via an off-air antenna system.

Can I choose only the channels I want to pay for?

Absolutely. Bulk TV & Internet's à la carte pricing makes it easy to only choose the channels that you want. Cable companies, however, require you to pay more for the channels you want by bundling them with other "junk channels" that residents typically don't want.

Is there less of a programming selection on satellite TV?

No. This is quite the contrary, as there are more than 1,800 channels available, including all of your standard movie channels such as HBO and Encore. Bulk TV & Internet also offers the most HD and International channels available to meet your residents' expectations.

How long does it take to get your service?

Most systems are built, tested, shipped and installed within 30 days. For most installations, there is minimal downtime for residents.

Are there other properties in our area that have your service?

In all likelihood, yes, considering Bulk TV & Internet provides service nationwide, including clients in all 50 states. For more information, ask your account representative for specific references in your area.
